London's New Possession.
And now, going back for a moment to that other brand of eigarette papers which we rolled together almost immediately after Lord Leighton's death, and which was picked up later in the London daily and evening press, you will remember that at first the scheme for purchasing the President's house failed. A few carnest men, nevertheless, took hold of the idea from another point of view. Mrs. Sutherland Orr and Mrs. Mathews (the President's sisters) made generates the subject only to the ondition that the house shall be suitably maintained

The House of the manuer.
Lord Leighton's house is notable not only in itself, but as the centre of an art colony which has been graphically described as a red group of artists' houses loyally closing round their chief. The master had seen the advantages of the site long before his friends, and found his reward thereby in a commaratively easy purchase of author in the site long before his in a comparatively easy purchase of the land. He built his house irrespective of vera winter fire-as we are now now—"I should be almost if I could be sure of a clean a clean table-cloth with simple vit, and a clean room to steep every day of the year. Those only luxuries I ever expect, and I don't know that I y much about anything more do. I should like to live a out of town, but then there sliminary danger that a man have twopence for the bustning—and I hate walking ets." The moral is not more. Mr. I have a strict the strict of the strict in its atmosphere. The Leighton house have phase only luxuries I ever expect a man have twopence for the bustning—and I hate walking ets." The moral is not more. Mr. I have a strict on the strict of the st aristocratic in its calm, as it is artistic in its atmosphere. The Leighton house strikes you at once with its individuality. Houses have physicgnomical characteristics as men have. Here is one of red brick, with windows, deepset and various, with loopholes here and there, indications of colonnades, and with a domed octagon and bays wrough in terra cotta—you know it at once for the home of a travelled man who has brought home to his own country many artistic preliminary danger that a man ont have twoponee for the bus morning—and I hate walking a streets. The moral is not to ct too much, and be worthy of a least more. Mr. Birrell's secret incess is no doubt the honesty of work and his undaunted persence. "After all." he said to the rade I am quoting, who signs self "V. V.," and writes for an erican journal, "When we get well m to it the way to be happy is to e pleasure in one's work, and do sith scrupulous fidelity. No happiss comes of hunting for pleasure. ere is a sort of rugged tranquillity the feeling that one has done well in the true and the just ing to the best of his ability."

When the Day is Over.
A celebrated man's bed-room must image have chamber that a man is private chamber that a man is saily himself. Here it is that he lays side his clothes, and with them all he pretence and affectations of that, his worldly manner, his politic seeming, his assumption of superiority over other mortals. But it is the Arab Hall that will be most prized by artists and students. Other rooms in the house prepare you for artistic surprises, but not for one so remarkable as this. The plan of the place was copied from La Ziza Orientalism in this Arab Hall, cheered by the gaiety of its radiant glass and its splendid tiles. You will remember what they called the Durbar Hall at the Indian Exhibition, with its mirror-like pool. There is something fascinating about the stillness of water, more especially if the pool bedeep. The fountain in the Arab Hall is not always playing, and the basin in the floor reflects the mysterious roof. One hates even to discount for a moment the weird charm of the Arab Hall, but it is possible to keep the first process of the state out.

LAURENCE.—Only the baptismal names to the control of the co not. One hates even to discount for a moment the weird charm of the Arab Hall, but it is possible to keep the imaginative faculties at too high a tension in an after-dinner chat. It seems almost profane to think of some stately guest of the master's missing his way, and with his nose in air walking into that limpid mirror on the Arab floor. But this happened to a very eminent and starchy indicated.

Talking about guardians, what funny things they do sometimes. The funny things they do sometimes they do sometimes the funny things they do sometimes. The funny things they do sometimes. Like a good many other people, I am atill waiting expectantly for that overflowing of the metropolis with motor-cars which was to have followed the Brighton experimental trip. What has become of the dozen highly-equipped omnibuses which,we were assured, were ready to start the moment the new law came into operation? Where are the multi-

MR. WHEELER.

Just imagine, the innocent inquiry imade to my readers last week about cycling lamplighters has brought shoals of letters to "The People" office. Evidently the Forest Cate lamplighter—or, as a correspondent points out—lamp extinguisher is not alone in his giory. Judging by the letters I have received, there is another "down Endon way," who enjoys great popularity; in fact, he seems to be the pride of the neighborn and out that their respective localities can boast of cycling sweeps, lamplifighters, coatermongers, detectives—teven tax collectors. I must, however, the deal with these next week, as these lines are all too short to criticise the Crystal Palace show. I shall be glad to hear, however, from my readers as did to hear, however, from my readers as the loved bicycles are put to.

MURDERED ON THE RAILWAY.
At Hednesford, the adjourned inquest on Catherine Dooley was resumed. Deceased's body was found in a railway cutting at Hednesford on Nov. 17. Evidence was given by Ads.
Stones and other witnesses showing that a person named Fowler was even coming from the place where the body was found. Two other persons named Freeman and Platt were identified as having been with deceased. Platt and Fowler also stated in conversation at the Jolly Colliers Inn on Nov. 15 that deceased was dead. A verdict of wilful murder was returned against Freeman, Platt, and Fowler.

A CORRECTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "PEOPLE."

Sir.—My attention has been drawn to the following paragraph in your last issue:—"Mr. E. Newton, member of Hampstead Vestry, has expressed his willingness to place a memorial tablet on the old house at Hampstead, formerly occupied by Sir Harry Vane, a ahining star of the Commonwealth, and Bishop Butler, author of the famous "Analogy." This is not quite correct, the Society of Arts having at my suggestion very kindly offered to do this, I having previously obtained the consent of the owners and the occupier of this interesting house. It trust you will find room for this, sir, and thus give the credit to those to whom it is due, the society having very generously placed other tablets on celebrated Hampstead houses also.—Your, &c., E. it had been officially stated by Mr. Harford, the general secretary of the Amalgamated Society, that no strike was contemplated. However, in order to provide against that contingency, they determined to find out what was the intention of each individual employs in their service. They therefore issued a circular to all their station-masters instructing them to ask every man what he intended to do if called out by the society. If he elected to obey the society rather than the company, he was to be instantly dismissed. The consequence of the inquiries was that nearly a hundred men were sont about their business. The society then demanded the reinstatement of these men, and the North-western was threatened with a strike if they were not taken back. That a great company, charged with important functions, which, in the interests of the public, must not be interrupted, has the right to ascertain how it will stand in the event of an embarrassing crisis arising is plain enough. But there are wrong ways as well as right ways of going to work; and we do not think there is much room for disputing the assertion that, on this occasion, the company went to work the wrong way. Instead of directing their officials to make inquiries as to the general disposition of the men, they peremptorily ordered the latter to say, then and there, what they would do in circumstances which had not yet arisen. To claim the right to dismise a man because he declines to say that he may not feel compelled to strike at some

It. At Chester, before Deputy-sheriff Cultimore, an action for breach of promise of marriage was brought by Isabella Bell, all housemaid, in the amployment of a veterinary surgeon, now living at Thornbury, Gloucestershire, against James Skitt, signalman, Nantwich.—Defendant first courted the ple' tiff at Wem, and afterwards, when she was living at Malpas, he promised marriage. His affection then cooled, and the planniff accretained that he was walking out with another girl.—230 damages were awarded.

A SAGACIOUS DOG.
At a special meeting of the members the Amalgamated Society of Wateren and Lighterman of the River hames, held in High-st., Lambeth, r. H. floeling, the general secretary the society, in the chair, a silvent placed around the sack of a triever dog known as "Roger, med by Mr. W. T. Court, of Stroud, recognition of the sagacity it disayed in saving the lives of the ptain and mate of the salling bargeizs, which foundered in Northeet peon Sept. 23 last.—The chairman, briefly relating the circumstances of the water was flowing and the same week, said that the barge sprung a kat a time when the 2 men in charge re asleep in the cabin. The dog, en the water was flowing into the minest, began to bark and to scratch the cabin door. After some times man awoke, and were just able to ich, a small boat at the stern when barge foundered. The eiliver collar d principally been subscribed for by members of the sailing barge anch of the society.
